

Subj: March 7, Tuesday Update
 Date: 3/13/2017 3:07:34 P.M. Central Daylight Time
 From: BHayes409@aol.com
 To: BOBinUGANDA@aol.com

On Tuesday we traveled to the area of the equator for an afternoon ministry opportunity. But on the way we made two stops. One was at the equator itself and the other to a crocodile farm. Now to me, having a crocodile farm is about as necessary as a cockroach farm. Both groups seems to do OK on their own. After we got there, we found these were not being raise for release but for meat and hides. Made a little better sense.

One of the guides asked us if we wanted to hold one of the babies but we declined. He said they were harmless. He picked one up and it snapped the end of his finger and it bled for the rest of our tour. We made a good choice.

The pictures below are three from the crocodile farm and one from the equator. You will love the sign at the entrance to the crocodile farm.

The photos are as follows:

1. Entrance to crocodile farm where sign reads "Trespassers will be eaten"
2. Some two to three year old crocodiles
3. A witchdoctor's shrine on the way to farm
4. Equator marker getting a facelift

